Challenge

Can you encapsulate the following paragraph in a single sentence or a single image?

Photosynthesis is the process by which plants convert light energy into chemical energy in the form of sugars. This process is crucial for plant growth and also produces the oxygen we breathe. It takes place in the chloroplasts, tiny structures within plant cells, using chlorophyll to absorb sunlight. Water and carbon dioxide are also essential ingredients for photosynthesis. Without this amazing process, life as we know it would not exist.
